HONGKONG, FEBRUARY 28, 1867.

WE learn with a great deal of pleasure, that Dr. MURRAY has placed a hundred dollars at the disposal of Mr. FREDERICK STEWART, towards the formation of a fund to pay for the translation into Chinese, of a few good English schoolbooks. The present was forwarded in a very unostentatious way, but although it was probably not contemplated that it would be publicly announced, we think it would a pity if this were not done, as the gift by being made known, may encourage others to contribute to the useful and philanthropic work proposed. Now that there is money forthcoming to pay for the undertaking, it will no doubt be easy to find Chinese scholars who are competent and willing to engage in it. We do not see that it is necessary to obtain the services of any renowned linguist for the performance of this simple task. The first thing to do, and that probably might best be done by Mr. STEWART himself, is to choose, revise and prepare the books to be translated, as there is not probably in existence, any book which would be exactly fitted for translation in extenso and without alteration into Chinese. For example, almost any elementary geography book, designed for the use of English children, would most likely describe China, and the Chinese, in a few unguarded and plain speaking paragraphs which would not be calculated to have a good effect in Chinese schools or to prepossess Chinese schoolmasters in favor of the book which contained them. Then it would be desirable to obtain as many elementary Chinese books as possible, and it might be worth while to condense the information contained in the English works which might be selected, so that as many of them as possible, treating different subjects, might be translated. The originals once produced to the proper form, we should think that an ordinary Chinese scholar, with the assistance of one of those "teachers," with whose fostering care not even the greatest professors of the language appear to be able to dispense, could put them into Chinese, leaving the manuscripts to be subsequently revised in style, and polished into the proper form by any classical Chinese sympathiser with the work who could be found.

At first, even when the books are prepared, it may be difficult for Mr. STEWART to introduce them all at once into the village schools. The native school-masters will have to be educated in the first instance, to a comprehension of their purpose and contents, but this is merely a work of time, and by using them in the first instance with classes in the Central school which could be kept going under the eye of the head master, a routine would be established which the native schoolmasters would soon be able to copy. Some of them perhaps might be obstinate, but the sooner such narrow-minded and troublesome assistants were removed from the corps of teachers engaged in carrying out the Government system of education in Hongkong, the better. The system of education should be a model so far as possible, held out and recommended to the school-masters of China generally. As adding some few Asiatic caricatures of schools to the total number of such institutions in the Chinese empire, we do not see that it has any value at all. Assuming that such teaching as is given in regular Chinese schools is, to some infinitesimal extent better than nothing, the horoscopatic contribution to the spread of Confucian philosophy which Hongkong could offer, is not worth speaking of. What we have to do is to try and introduce a better system, which may be imitated, and ultimately indeed as the civilisation of this empire progresses, must be imitated in China at large, to furnish all Chinese schoolmasters who choose to avail themselves of the advantage, with the implements, these books which are about to be created, for cultivating the Chinese mind on improved principles. It is impossible that the mass of persons engaged in the work of tuition in China can be more prejudiced and pig-headed than the mass of people engaged on similar work in England, yet how great a change has taken place within the last ten or twenty years in the views on education held there. How little twenty years ago would any departure at the great schools of the kingdom, from the dull routine of the Latin grammar have been tolerated by chapel and college dons, and yet how widely the study of modern languages, science and moral philosophy has been introduced at all the great educational centres. The man is still living who may be said to have conceived the idea of teaching boys, by Socratic conversations, to think out for themselves the social problems involved in the relations of men with one another, and now there have been for many years, classes at the London University,—in the junior school even of the London University,—for the study of Social Science, and schools accessible to the humblest classes, whose such moral studies are pursued are scattered all over London and the country. The neck of this great difficulty with which we are now concerned, the introduction of improved educational methods in China has been broken, the idea has once been recognised at head quarters, since at a great native college in Pekin the study of Western knowledge had been formally sanctioned. The enlarged intercourse of European nations with China must create a demand for the knowledge which endows Europeans with their superiority over Asiatics, a superiority which must be growing every day more and more visible to the most intelligent Chinese, and what the Government of Hongkong in the schools under its management has to do, is in the first place so far as it can, to supply this demand with its own hands, and, what is more important still, to show the Chinese how they may continue to supply it themselves on any scale they please.

A Match at the Race-course.

Two races were run yesterday afternoon at the course, one between Oregon John and Plaudit, the other between Pathfinder and Pomeroy. In the first case the distance was only half a mile as in the race for the Hock Stakes. The two horses got away rather badly, Plaudit having a lead of a couple of lengths, but the veteran contrived to catch him, and the greater part of the race was a neck and neck affair so that at the finishing-post those who stood near the judge's box could tell which horse won. Oregon John, however, added another to the list of triumphs which he has achieved this year and won by a head. The more important match was not so closely contested, as Pomeroy, though his rider struggled hard for a lead never, headed his rival, and Pathfinder in the last round —the distance was the same as for the Foochow Cup, from the Black Rock twice round and in,— was two or three lengths ahead and came in an easy winner.

The Small Pox.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS."

SIR,—I am somewhat surprised that you have not adverted to the fact that the Princess Royal flying the flag of Admiral King should have anchored in the middle of the shipping of this harbour with small pox on board. Surely this is not right, for it is not long since, the Spanish steamer similarly afflicted was ordered into the Lyemoon pass, without the limits of the harbor. How can Admiral King thus transgress all harbor regulations? Behoold my he ought to be first man to observe them. I believe there is a forcible kind of quarantine established, but of how much good it is, may be inferred from the report generally current and credited that on the day after the arrival of the Princess Royal, two of her officers, one just recovered from this dreadful scourge, visited the Mess-Room of the 2/20 Regiment, remaining three some time... On the following day the captains of the dock pond their respects to Admiral King, a ceremonial which I presume, they could not avoid. If this Government be wise and firm, no future admiral will thus endanger our lives.—I am, Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,
CIVILIAN.

Hongkong, 27th February, 1867.

SPONTANEOUS GENERATION.—At a recent sitting of the Academy of Sciences a paper was received from M. Donné on the subject of spontaneous generation. Our readers may recollect our mentioning a series of experiments instituted by that gentleman upon some eggs which, being allowed to putrefy, the shells being left entire, prevented an infinitude of living creatures inside at the end of a certain time. M. Donné, however, had a scruple: the production of life might require the existence of an empty space; and an unbroken egg might therefore be open to objection. In the present instance, therefore, he pierced a hole in each egg, and put some of the contents in order to form a vacuum, then placed the eggs end upwards in a pail, and poured boiling water over them. The pail was then carefully covered and the whole exposed to a continuous temperature, varying between 15 and 20 deg. Cent. At the end of ten days, the contents of the eggs were examined under the microscope, and found to contain a vast number of lively vibrios. M. Donné therefore concludes that these must have been generated spontaneously, since, if any germs had got into the eggs during the operation of emptying part of the contents, the boiling water would have killed them. M. Pasteur having admitted that 75 deg. Cent. are sufficient to destroy the vitality of any germ whatever. M. Pasteur, who was present, immediately replied that he had never said any such thing, and that even 100 deg. are scarcely sufficient to kill certain germs: he was therefore perfectly convinced that the vibrios were owing to the introduction of some of those imperceptible germs which he supposes to be constantly floating about in the air.—We are certainly not inclined to accept M. Pasteur's views, and consider his pons asinist theory to be utterly unsupported by facts; but on the other hand we think M. Donné did not act judiciously in making the slightest hole in his eggs, knowing beforehand, as he must, that his adversary was sure to seize upon that circumstance as a sufficient refutation of the experiment.—Galignani.

You'd like to know how ere it was that sich a metamor—
Phesis as this took place which now you gays upon with or.
Most smilingly I'll answer you since you have axed the question;
This poem was—like many more—brought on by indigestion;
And underneath the influence of that sublime complaint,
I will to you a narrative unfold without restraint;
And when that narrative from out my soul has finished welling,
I'll take it down to Mr. Smith, which he'll correct the spellin.

Unaccustomed as I am to Biographic writing;
I've had to take great pains to tell the story I'm inditing.
I've bought the lives of famous men in volumes pile on pile—
I might buy books how could I hope to buy a graphic style.
Not only have I bought those Books,—I've read them though they bored me,
Yet, with such knowledge as I want, I cannot say they've stored me.
I'm like a horse outside a field of ripe delicious clover—
—Exceedingly distressed, because the style I can't get over.

In a small but most romantic Town, (I think that reads all right)
The subject of this narrative, (that's it) first saw the light.
Of parentage he boasted quite as much as any other
In the land—for he had both a father and a mother.
In infancy he was—ah well I, in fancy you may paint him
A cherub if you like—I won't—Though p'raps the Pope may paint him;
For his mamma has oft averred "his eyes shoe fire surprizing"—
Perhaps a child who's little eyes shoot fire's worth envomising.

In time he grew a fine young man, most dignified and tall,
And he possessed a countenance constructed to appal,
I cannot say his eyes were bright—no doubt their fire was latent—
They looked like gooseberries preserved by Crosse and Blackwell's patent.
Oh! very proud indeed he was of those delightful eyes,
And little of them shewed he to a world he did despise;
His nose he always kept turned up, his eyelids kept turned down,
And at the top end of his nose there sat a dreadful frown.
A curious place for frown to sit! You're ready to avow,
That hero's frown, by right, should sit on hero's noble brow;
I'll only one objection make against the point you've hit upon—
Frowns cannot sit on noble brows when there's no brow to sit upon.

As you will readily suppose of feelings he'd his part,—
No matter what was in his head, he'd something in his heart.
Something broad, and deep, and long, and loud, and vast, and high—
That something had a name—it was, Su-pe-ri-or-i-ty.
It grew within him very strong—it had tremendous roots—
It filled his very being—aye! it filled his very boots;
These said epoch proud and haughty things and told such dreadful rowsers,
That very soon they mischief made and quarrelled with his trousers;
His trousers fels above his boots,—his boots they stood their ground.
And thus between the two a wide division's always found.

I've brought before you Mr. H. this gent whose name I trust,
You will with pleasure listen to; it is, Lord Wiggins Dust.
And if my reasons for produsing him you wish to seek,
I want his kind assistance to investigate—the Peak
For what's Professor Scogge good sir, what's Mr. Smith likewise,
And what's a poor old Tar like me in such an enterprise?
We want great talent, learning, pride, also terriversation—
That words' a good one you'll allow, and so's amalgamation.
Amalgamation's what we mean, we're going to be allies,
And prosecute indignantly our gorgeous enterprise.

T'was very singular—the way we found each other out;
Therefore I will relate to you, how that fact came about.
I felt despressed, desponding, dull, disgusted downright sorrowful,
I walked to the Parade ground and I said says I "Wot next!"
Then down upon the ground I fell and in a knot I curled
Myself, and cried in dismal tones, "I'm tired of the world!
"I'll go into a nunnery—take office in the Mint—
A lodging in a wilderness—send I may never squint!
"I don't care wot I does—I dont—I'll do wot ever comes fust!"
A gent then walked before my eyes—It was Lord Wiggins Dust.
He paused away, I felt relieved, I sat down on a bench,
And with the following cheerful words my feelings tried to quench.
"All rite old Blade! Cheer up my boy! The Peak is on your mind
"But you can pitch it off you know, if so be your inclined.
"I'm not inclined though—blow me tight!—I'll stick to it like glue,
"Cant I be dumpy if I likes it, And sentimental too?
"I likes a little sentimen—a little moralisin',
"I'll look at things in a new light—I'll put my moral eyes in.
On Saturday and I declare, the week to-morrow is,
"Shall be the period that I will make some more allies in."
"Allies d'you want?" A voice replied "Then who d'ye think of me."
I turned and on my panting sight there burst L. W. B.
"Ahe!" says he. "My noble Blade! I hunger for alliance,
"I'll join you in your enterprise—my destiny's defiance!
"In you I my preserver—yes!—my long lost oke-yild great—
"My Uncle from the Indies, Ho! Aha! Revenge is sweet!"
"I've heard about revenge" says I "I've bin where great men cater
"For fame and loud applause at the Victoria Theayter;
"I've seen the gorgeous Peasant band beneath the Tyrant's yoke,—
"I've seen that Peasant rise and hit that Tyrant's head a poke;
"But wot revenge has got to do with that there blessed Peak.
"If you'll allow me, I'll observe, seems 'bout as plain as Greek."
"Let it be Greek" says he. "So that we by it get renown—
"But wot revenge has got to do with that there Peak?
"I will allow me I'll observe, seems 'bout as plain as Greek."
"Let it be Greek" says he. "So that we by it get renown—
"But wot revenge has got to do with that there blessed Peak.
